Rumanian Counter-Offensive Reported

There is a strong feeling in French circles, however, that it would be wrong to accord Bulgaria any advantages that would operate to the prejudice of the other Balkan states which stood with the Allies.

According to information received in Peace Conference circles, the Hungarian offensive against the Rumanians continues, although the latter are now reported to have begun a counter-offensive which seems to be developing successfully in the north where the Hungarians are stated to have been thrown back across the river. Competent circles prefer, however, to await confirmation of these reports, as it is pointed out that the Rumanian Army is badly organized.

The Circus at Montabaur

An American circus came the other day to Montabaur, not far from Conz, created by the occupying army ut of whatever material was at hand. Elephants, bears, camels, and ponies were acquired from Hagenbeck's; army wagons were decorated and ransformed into circus chariots and loats; the "grand free street pageant," iar to American cities, with the and wagon ahead and pretty nearly everything, except, apparently, the team calliope, following in due order, has made its way over the cobbled ets of Montabaur delighting the ulace and tempting many of them pay their marks for admission to "big show." In addition there were the sideshows and refreshnt stands that complete the entouage of a real circus; and excursion trains were run from Coblenz during the four days that the circus exhibited. The circus, after three or four months rehearsals, was given by the first occupying Montabaur. New Houses in France

Students of architecture in France in years to come will find a type of which will be quite different from the romantic-looking, but not altogether comfortable to live in houses of the before-the-war period. Those interested in the rebuilding of the devastated regions say that the new style is to be neither French nor Americaneven though America is to figure quite largely in the rebuilding of the country-but is to be typical of the new France. Various American necessities, such as bath tubs, for example, formerly considered rather as luxurles, plumbing systems and other household conveniences are to be installed. Also former farm buildings are to be improved upon, and proper provision made for farm animals, which were formerly, in many cases, as much at home inside the house as elsewhere. But these modern dwellings are to be French homes, there powers, is to be no attempt made by helpers from other nations to take away their individuality, but rather to help to express in the modern architecture the feelings of that new France which has emerged from the struggle for a action should have struck. Ireland and the League To the Editor of The Christian Science

Monitor:

Senators in Washington are beginning to file memorials "remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed League of Nations treaty unless selfdetermination is granted to Ireland." Such resolutions, of course, assume that in some way or other Article X of the peace treaty prevents Ireland from securing recognition of the right of self-determination. The Irish contention seems to be that Great Britain can in some way use this article to that it prohibits aid or sympathy of any kind to a people attempting to Keats wrote pure ablution, and it senators are capitalizing the warmth of Irish feeling in this respect.

Chaining up the Proletariat

Mr. Aguiano led the way in a series of strong speeches, giving an account of some of the means of compulsion exercised by the government with the ct of assuring their victories in He spoke particularly of what had taken place in Andalusia, of which he had had personal experince and where, he declared, the protariat was chained up. In the provce of Cordova, the government had orted to every kind of violence in order to secure the return of its own andidates. In Andalusia, members of the working classes had been cked up in filthy prisons. Certain cedures, no doubt, had been conncted because the spirit of citiearts of the Spanish proletariat h had desired to take a real part the electoral contest and which unferstood perfectly what the Russian ution meant. He declared that ne had full confidence in the early riumph of the social revolution in and elsewhere.

Mr. Llaneza, secretary of the Asturian Miners Syndicate, was received h an enormous burst of applause nd "vivas" for the Asturian miners n he rose to speak. He himself had been a candidate for the constituency of Hinofoso del Duque, and he told the meeting that he was quite satisfied with the result, in a sense, nd that he would have been elected out for the suspension of the constiitional guarantees and the maintenance of the state of war. Neverthe-less, he thought that this state of ngs would prove advantageous to he working classes, since it caused ie spirit of protest to rise up in them, lso the spirit of citizenship, and in ue time they would fructify. WIRELESS TELEPHONY IN NIGHT FLYING

Special to The Christian Science Monitor LONDON. England-The extraordinary value of wireless telephony for directional purposes in connection with aircraft has been emphasized reently in its relation to night flying. It often happens that in daylight interommunication between planes, or between wireless stations and aircraft is unnecessary, but in flying across country at night the use of the wireless phone will become more and more efficacious.

Some details are now available of a test carried out during a recent night flight from Kenley to Paris. This in no way constitutes a record. but is nevertheless interesting as indicating what is being done as a matter of routine. In the place of the Achelis cup which, since the institution of the liams 2d in 1916, was the principal prize in the singles, the club has offered for competition the "Seabright bowls" in singles and doubles which must be won three times but unlike the Achelis cup not necessarily in succession to become the property of the winner

The Achelis cup which has been the hardest fought for trophy ever offered for competition in tennis was won in 1900, when it was first offered by M. D. Whitman, then at the height of his tennis career. In 1901 and 1902. W. A. Larned was the victor, but in 1903, when a victory would have given him permanent possession, he was beaten by B. C. Wright. Again in 1904 and 1905 Larned was the victor, only to have the prize snatched away in 1906 by the victory of F. B. Alexander. In 1907, R. D. Little was the victor, and in 1908 and 1909, W. J. Clothier, the Philadelphia expert. For the next four years the cup changed hands every year, but in 1914, 1915 and 1916. the match was won by R. N. The Discount Broker

The banks in London very seldom Old Dominion feal direct with a holder of bills. The Pond Creek istom adopted is for a holder to get is bills discounted by a "discount Swift & Co..... oker," a man who does nothing else such business. As can be readily en, the discount broker has to do neenormous business to make anying out of it, for he has to give the st rate possible on account of comon, thus reserving to himself aly a slight turn between the rate of unt given and the one he receives om the bank. The employment of a Boston Montana ount broker is beneficial to both Boone es, the holder of the bill and the bank, for the reason that the former ets the benefit of the rate, which, unr competition, is probably higher ian he could get from his own banker, and the bank also benefits, inasmuch s the discount broker is the one takg'all the risk; that is, a discount broker of any standing, for the banks ount broker must have knowledge egarding the standing, financial and herwise, of those for whom he is ng business, and it is only through ears of experience and careful judgnent that this can be acquired.

IMPROVEMENT IN RAILROAD TRAFFIC

NEW York, New York-With many lives of industry now working up toward capacity operations, traffic and earnings of the railroads are showing some improvement. There is still a long before the government deficits are somewhat reduced.

In freight traffic February marked the low point. Then the tide turned, and has been gradually rising since. It is still, however, considerably below that of 1918. Measured by this standard, freight traffic is about 15 per cent below that of 1918. Improvement during June and July, however,

RETURN OF WATER POWERS IS SOUGHT

Author of Maine Bill Says People of State Should Take Steps for Restoration of the Lakes and Reservoirs to Themselves

Special to The Christian Science Monito PORTLAND, Maine-Ultimate restoration to the people of the State of Maine, of the lakes and storage reservoirs which are the sources of and which control Maine's water powers, is what the people of the State should now seek to accomplish, according to Percival P. Baxter, author of the water power bill passed by the Leg-islature of which he is a member.

In connection with the answers of the Maine Supreme Court to the five water power questions submitted by the Legislature, Mr. Baxter says that former legislatures have given away nost of the valuable rights in the akes, and that these rights must be back at a fair price. To this end he urges the selection of a Legislature "in sympathy and in accord with the requirements of the people. It may be both advisable and necesary, he says, to amend the state Constitution in order that the people of Maine "may take some definite, clear, and constructive action regarding water powers.'

The Laborer Is Worthy of His Hire

WHEN the leaders of Labor determined to arouse what is known as class consciousness, they never seem to have realized that they could not do this without simultaneously arousing sex consciousness. What, of course, is referred to in these terms is not the full relationship of man to woman, but a very definite and even limited phase of this relationship, the question of wages. If Labor ever imagined that the one question could be raised, and the other ignored it was simply dreaming, but the probability is that it never took into consideration the economic convulsion which the appearance of woman in the labor market was bound to cause, nor, if it had, could it have done other than it did. At the same time there are fewer men than women in the world, so that, on the simple calculation of water finding its own level, it is easy to grasp the inevitable, when all the restrictions upon female labor are withdrawn, and all the other disabilities of woman removed.

The simple truth is that men, with just about equal stupidity and injustice, have for century after century shut woman out from the schools, the professions, and the business world, loaded her with household cares, or confined her to the kitchen and the nursery, and then proclaimed her intellectual and even mechanical inferiority. Now that uneducated woman is the intellectual inferior of educated man, Nell Cook quite unequal to the Abbot of Canterbury, is a self-evident proposition. But reverse this: does anybody suppose that the swineherds and plowmen of Whitby were the equal of that wonderful abbess Hild, the teacher of John of Beverley, the counselor of kings? Nor was Hild, as it were, one, like her own famous hind, Cædmon, born out of due time; she was the ancestor of a line of mighty English women who took advantage of such chances as came their way, and proved that the intellectual supremacy of men was not the result of sex superiority, but of inequality of

The sins of centuries cannot be wiped out in a decade or two, but time is entirely upon the side of the woman. Girton and Newnham have been followed in England by female suffrage, and when equal suffrage follows prohibition in the United States, the English-speaking world will have done much to blot out the old errors. There is a much closer connection between strong drink and equal suffrage than is superficially apparent: the one stirs the passions which actively oppose or promote indifference to the other. The instincts of the senses prefer the old ideals of dependence to the scientific law of equality, the plaything to the fellow-worker. It is just because the plaything is merging into the fellow-worker that the apostles of the old régime set forth their libation in the temper of Swinburne, when he wrote,

"Then love was the pearl of his oyster, And Venus rose red out of wine."

But the fellow-worker is triumphing, the fellow-worker who does not forget that there is an economic side to the new relationship; who demands, and is already taking, equal opportunity; who offers equal service, but requires equal pay; and who, like Madame Chrysanthemum, is quite unemotionally equal to trying her dollars between her teeth.

The fellow-worker, it is quite certain, and it is a consummation devoutly to be wished, is not going, as described in a recent communication to this paper, to work ten hours a day, for six days a week, in a factory, for the munificent remuneration of 70 cents a day, whilst the carpenters' union is demanding a dollar an hour. The sun has set upon old days of testing, under the law of supply and demand, how little a human being could keep alive upon and work; the new day of class consciousness is dawning, but it has to be a day of economic sex consciousness as well. When the representatives of the United States accepted the declaration of Jefferson that "We hold these truths to be self-evident: that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their creator with unalienable rights; that amongst these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness," neither he nor they certainly ever intended to imply that "men" meant men and not women, or that the pursuit of happiness was likely to end successfully in the factory environment, of the twentieth century, with existence capitalized at 70

It shall be presumed that the factory in question was an exceptional one, though the writer of the letter, describing her own experience, insists on the contrary. In any case, taken at their very best, the conditions surrounding the work of women, disclosed in recent communications to this paper, are decidedly unsatisfactory. Employers have not yet mastered the elemental fact that no system of wages can be said to approximate to Priniple into which the sex definition is permitted to intrude. Women, in plain English, must be paid as individuals and not as a class. The moment they are paid as a class, on the basis of less efficiency, the whole question is begged, the sex instinct roused, and, wherever at any rate women have the vote, breakers are seen ahead. Why, to take a case very much canvassed of late, should a girl on a London bus, doing precisely the same as a man, be paid less for her work? The answer is not to be found completely in the obvious explanation of absence of organization, which recoils rather mercilessly on the bona fides of the bus companies, it has to be found in omething far more fundamental, and that the belief, born of time and encouraged of custom, that a woman s not, in the expression of so admirable an authority as Miss Margery Currey, of Chicago, the provider of a

Now here, whether anyone recognizes it or not, is the atmosphere of medievalism rising in the twentieth century. What on earth does it matter to the girl on the bus, taking fares, hour after hour, in heat or cold, climbing and descending the stairs from platform to roof, every few minutes, in rain, or snow, or fog, whether a world, engrossed entirely in its own affairs, is pleased to imagine she is earning pin-money, when, in reality, she may be providing for a family? And what, it may be asked, is the gentleman of independent means doing, who paints a picture, writes a book, or goes upon the stage? His value, like that of the bus girl, is entirely dependent on his services, and no one has ever yet attempted to set up a separate scale of remuneration for gentlemen with private incomes.

The truth of the matter, if the world will only be honest with itself, is that the law of the city has not been so very dissimilar from that of the jungle, and that the stronger animal has dominated the weaker, and made her dependent on him. All the time, however, the influence of Principle has been permeating the human consciousness. The great rib theory has been gently relegated to limbo, until humanity has at last gained a truer conception of the meaning of the wonderful allegory of creation.

Raisuli Once Again

WHEN the Spanish Government first resorted, some eighteen months ago, to the desperate policy of buying the allegiance of Raisuli, the notorious Moroccan brigand, it was quite evident to those who knew Morocco and had any acquaintance with history that Spain was indeed storing up trouble for herself. The policy of aying Danegeld has never succeeded. The Saxon King Ethelred the Unready found that out, a thousand years ago, and many kings and princes had found it out before his day and have found it out since. Ethelred paid his gold to the Danes, who agreed, in return, to leave him and his lands alone. They did so, until the next time. When they wanted more gold they came again, and the more they were paid the more surely did they return. And so it has ever been. Having tasted the delights of the steady income of 100,000 pesetas a month which Spain paid him, on condition that he should cast his influence with the unruly elements in the country on the side of Spain, Raisuli was not likely to surrender this perquisite without a struggle. Neither has he done so.

Just about a year ago, after Madrid had been paying this bribe for some months, getting all the time deeper into the mire, compelled to resort to all manner of subterfuge in order to conceal the true situation in the Riff from the Spanish people, affairs suddenly blew up to a crisis. The Spanish zone had long been notorious as one of the headquarters of German propaganda, carried on there, as it was indeed in Spain itself, with scarcely any effort at concealment. The Spanish Government, for a long time, took no action, but when it became known that Raisuli, whilst taking his pay regularly from Spain, was frankly plotting with Germany, receiving large sums of German gold for the purpose of "looking after German interests in Morocco," and was in open correspondence with the German Consul at Tetuan, Madrid was absolutely forced into making some show, at least, of taking action. At first, there were remonstrances, and then, when these were of no avail, threats, threats that if Raisuli did not amend his ways his income would be cut off. Raisuli replied promptly with the counter threat that if anything of the kind was done he would make war on Spain. Spain ultimately did summon courage sufficient to cut off the income, and now Raisuli has been as good as his word.

He did not act at once, it is true. For several months past, in amongst the great happenings in Europe, the world has caught fugitive glimpses of the "notorious old rascal" in Morocco consolidating his position anew amongst the tribesmen. A successful brigand has always made a tremendous appeal to the Moor, and there can be no question of Raisuli's success as a brigand. The man who could capture Kaid Sir Harry Maclean and other Europeans and hold them up to ransoms, who could then secure for himself the position of a British protected subject, and secure also, when he wanted it, the governorship of one of the most important districts in the country, and so, now brigand and outlaw, now high official and honored citizen, play fast and loose as he pleased with the authorities of two countries-such a man would surely be accounted, in the Riff at any rate, a worthy leader indeed. The latest news from the Spanish zone tells of the tribesmen in large numbers "deserting to Raisuli," and not only those of the Spanish zone, but many from across the border in the French zone. As to Raisuli himself, he is in his element, carrying on a vigorous guerrilla warfare with all his old skill, and causing anxious days and anxious nights alike in Paris and

At the Throat of the Middle Class

EVIDENTLY this summer is to be memorable in the annals of socialism in the United States. In any event, it marks the period of a gigantic struggle within the ranks of the Socialists themselves, a struggle for mastery, to determine whether the moderates shall continue to have influence and standing or shall disappear in the complete absorption of the Socialist movement by the revolutionary element. Since this struggle, from the revolutionary point of view, is to be merely preliminary to a much greater struggle for the control of the machinery of government and industry by the revolutionary Socialists, the outcome may well be attended with some interest by the general run of people in the country, particularly, perhaps, by those who constitute what is called the middle class.

In the face of such a situation, there is cause for general satisfaction in the fact that the revolutionaries, who are primarily the promoters of this summer's intellectual warfare, have put out a very definite program. So far as their contest within the ranks of socialism is concerned, following their organization as the National Left Wing Conference at their New York convention in June, they mean to spend the time until September in getting possession of the Socialist Party, if possible; that is to say, in eliminating the influence of the moderate Socialists, who would temporize with existing institutions. If successful in this, the revolutionaries, come September, will, through the agency of another convention, begin the achievement of their main program, by allying the Socialist movement of the United States with the so-called Communist groups of other countries—such as the Bolsheviki of Russia and the Spartacans of Germany—to the end of overthrowing and destroying the existing form of government, establishing a Dictatorship of the Proletariat, and thereby eventually setting up the Socialist world order.

There is nothing confused or indefinite about all this. Definiteness is, of this program, a conspicuous characteristic. What is needed is that people everywhere shall as definitely comprehend it and understand it for what it really is. Also, that they shall differentiate those social changes and disorders that contribute to it from similar disorders which, perhaps, have no direct relation to it. It is important, for example, that strikes as they are now occurring shall be correctly identified and classified. It is important to an understanding of the situation that Labor union strikes, if merely for higher wages, or union recognition, or improvement of working conditions, shall be differentiated from the strikes instigated by the radical Socialists. To the left-wing radicals the strike is primarily important as conducing to class-consciousness among the workers, as mobilizing the forces of the proletariat, and as a stepping-stone to the assumption of political power. This last appears to have been well illustrated in the recent strikes in Winnipeg and Seattle, when disorder that started with industrial aims was speedily made use of for the purposes of municipal control. To the left wing of socialism, organized Labor as we are accustomed to observe it is as much a phase of capitalism as is the attitude of the middle class, or bourgeoisie, as they term it. In the left-wing program, there is to be no temporizing with these "bulwarks of capitalism" any more than with capitalism itself. Capitalism must go down, say the left-wing Socialists, and because its downfall is imperative—and here is the main point to be generally comprehended—the existing government is to be, if the left wing can achieve its aim, not used, but destroyed, annihilated. The argument is that the middle class, while itself the traditional carrier of democracy, and while it has been necessary historically as a means of breaking the power of feudalism, is now accepting and promoting the dictatorship of Capital and seeking to reconcile all classes; and therefore, if capitalism is to be overthrown, the middle-class democracy must

Of course this is war. It is unlikely that the middle class, in the United States if anywhere, will yield up its idea of democratic government, even for the sake of getting rid of capitalistic oppression, without a struggle. The point is that the left-wing Socialists realize this, and are alert and comprehensive in their preparations for that struggle. As they see it, the actual revolution may not be immediate, the Government of the United States may not actually be overthrown and destroyed tomorrow, or next week. But the struggle, the conclusive attempt to conquer and to destroy it—that is Now. But does the middle-class democracy realize this? Does the middle class comprehend that, now or never, it must justify itself? That surely is the question. And it involves the whole American theory of community welfare as worked out in a form of government.

Old Swimming Holes, and New

Nowadays somebody is always running down elusive bits of information which are, everybody will agree, more interesting than useful. Perhaps one such person will some day be able to tell us, of all human beings in the wide world, just how many know how to swim. He might, indeed, serve a useful purpose thereby, if one may suspect any real wish for information in that question, "Can you swim?" so often asked wherever, in the summer season, people stand together at water's edge, gazing forth. And without any statistics to rely upon, one might venture the statement that the proportion of persons who have proved their ability to float and to propel themselves in water that is "over one's head" is a good deal larger than it used to be, a generation or so ago. In those days, of course, it was proverbial that seafaring men, as a rule, could not swim. They were supposed to get all they wanted of the sea without voluntarily getting into it. And in those days grown men were forever telling what sport they had had, as boys, in the "old swimming hole," without giving any evidence to speak of that would betoken mature swimming ability.

But all that has changed now. Sailors like to swim; they take regular advantage of their unusual opportunities in that direction. And grown men, younger as a class, perhaps, than the grown men of earlier times, spend far less time telling of "old" swimming holes than they spend in looking for, and diving into, new ones. As for women and girls, so many of the latter took to swimming, for one reason or another, a few years ago, that great numbers of the former are now fully as able to control themselves and surrounding circumstances in the water as they ever have been on land. Which, by the way, is saying a good deal.

Of course, one of the reasons why swimming is more generally practiced now than it used to be, is because beneficent governments, whether of the people or otherwise, some time ago, recognized the fact that thousands of persons in and near great cities did not find it easily possible to go where there were decent opportunities for swimming, and undertook to bring decent opportunities for swimming to the people. Beaches were cleaned, rivers dredged and purified, lakes were parked, natatoriums constructed, to the end that that boy or girl is now isolated indeed who cannot, if he or she will; find clear water enough somewhere near home to afford a "good swim."

One might almost aver that, with decent opportunities for swimming now generally available, decency itself seems to be more nearly a matter of course. There are, it is true, certain things to be said as to the propriety of allowing urchins to dress and undress upon Boston Common in order to avail themselves of a cooling dip in the historic Frog Pond, which is now minus frogs and plus running water; but it cannot be overlooked that the urchins themselves are, for the most part, as unconscious as the day itself, and that, also for the most part, they show rare ability in adapting themselves to go to and from the scene clad in bathing suits beneath the prescribed blouse and trousers. And after all, people do not make so much of going into the water as they used. They take it more as a matter of course. It is not unusual to find whole families peacefully and joyously bathing together in the arm of some creek in the open marsh, oblivious of the gaze of hundreds of people passing in automobiles on the parkway a few yards distant. And bathing suits nowadays are, as a rule, made use of for swimming purposes rather than for display. Where everybody is in swimming, any particular body is lost in the throng.

That, of course, is of this day and generation, the very stuff of democracy.

Notes and Comments

EDITH CAVELL'S unforgetable words, "Patriotism is not enough," would be Lord Robert Cecil's choice if he had to decide on a motto for the League of Nations. It will be admitted that no man more than Lord Robert has shown himself aware of the high moral purposes of the league. He has proved it by both word and deed. Disbelief and ridicule have not turned him from his purpose or chilled his enthusiasm. He treats the unbelievers with that good-humored tolerance which he showed in relating, at the Independence Day dinner at the Savoy, the cynic's proposal of the first line of Tennyson's "Charge of the Light Brigade" as the league's motto. "Half a league, half a league, half a league onward." "I don't mind," said Lord Robert, "provided proper emphasis is laid on the word, 'onward'!"

Ordinarily the cover of an art exhibition catalogue is an ephemeral thing, but in making one for the catalogue of its fifth annual exhibition, the Provincetown Art Association evidently meant that this list of exhibited pictures, instead of being thrown away, should be preserved for its own sake. The designer decorated the front cover with a delightful wood block print of typical Cape Cod dwellings, and the back cover with a map tracing the first and second expeditions of the Mayflower Pilgrims after their earliest American landing at what is now Provincetown. More than that, the map is made delightfully reminiscent by such locations as "the place where the women washed," "where they saw the Indians and the dog," " spring where they drank their first New England water," "woods into which the Indians ran," and other reminders of things that happened when the men and women of the Mayflower first walked on the soil of America.

IF IN the contemplation of her modernity, constantly providing her with forward views, England believes that she has bidden farewell to all medievalism, let her attend some public and civic ceremony. For example, the King's proclamation of peace as it was witnessed in St. James's Palace quite recently, might it not have just stepped out of the Middle Ages? The band of the Life Guards in their gold and crimson tabards, their conductor in a silver helmet, topped by an enormous red plume; the sergeants-at-arms, carrying their maces, the six officers-at-arms in their sleeveless coats of crimson, gold, and royal blue silk, embossed with lions and little harps; and the trumpeters playing their herald tunes-how ancient, how picturesque, how appropriate to its surroundings, was the whole mise en scène! The reign of Henry V, after the defeat of the Armada, doubtless, witnessed peace proclamations from the sovereign to the people, somewhat on these lines and of not so very dissimilar appearance.

AFTER no little discussion of the relation of the author of books to the producer of motion pictures, book authorship and screen production have come together by the organization of a number of American writers with a motion picture manager to see what they can do by harmonious cooperation. One author goes so far as to say that "in these days when books have been almost shoved out of existence by the magazines, authors should be grateful to have their stories and novels on the screen." The situation may puzzle those who believe that authorship consists in writing; but times change, and perhaps the great author of the future will really produce his thoughts in a succession of motion pictures. Yet somehow one doubts it.

MR. SELBIE, general manager of the London Metropolitan Railway, gave both surprise and amusement to the members of the Select Committee of the House of Commons when he mentioned the fondness of Londoners for traveling, as a reason for the congestion of the railway. "There are a large number of people in London," he said, "traveling for mere pleasure." "Surely you don't suggest that anybody would travel in the Metropolitan Railway for pleasure!" exclaimed the chairman with unfeigned surprise. Everybody laughed, which was good-natured of them. Packed like sardines in a tin describes a mauvais quart d'heure which most people have experienced, but it was left to the manager of the London Metropolitan gravely to bring the accusation of joy-riding in such conditions!

HALF an inch or so of ribbon seems a small thing by itself, but a recent discovery of waste of such material in a hat manufactory serves as a good example of the tremendous total of wise economy that is beginning to be practiced throughout the industrial world by thus taking into consideration the seemingly unimportant. In this case the girls whose work it was to sew silk-ribbon bows and hatbands on hats had each customarily been given a roll of ribbon from which she cut off the length needed for her purpose: almost invariably she cut more than she needed, and when the efficiency man estimated the total value of these wasted bits of ribbon, they figured up to $800 a year in a single factory. The ribbons are now cut with accurate gauges, and the waste in that factory is done away with. Although many things that happen nowadays would disturb Benjamin Franklin, there are surely others that would mightily please him.
